Bipolar disorder (BP) is a mood disorder characterised by hyperactivity of the brain that causes extreme mood swings. Many lines of evidence implicate oxidative stress in the pathogenesis of BP. A common polymorphism in the NADPH-cytochrome P450 reductase (POR) gene, resulting in a POR allele linked to superactivity (PA), has been associated with BP. However, no studies have examined whether POR polymorphism affects BP susceptibility. Glutathione reductase (GR) gene, encoding a pivotal antioxidant enzyme, has also been shown to be linked to BP. We, therefore, investigated the role of POR and GR polymorphisms in BP by case-control association analysis. We analysed the polymorphisms of GR (rs11515 and rs7579) and POR (rs108915).
