Jan 28, 2011 Those looking to do the 2018 Eurovision Song Contest on home soil should look no further than MTV News' European Video Countdown for your first look at this year's countries' entries. The first episode of 2018's edition of the countdown (due to be broadcast this Thursday on MTV Europe) features a big Belgian showdown between the previously announced winning entries of the Belgian Grand Prix. The choices of 2017's edition winner Isabelle Béart and 2017's runner-up Charlotte de Witte — and this year's dance winner Tyla — are joined by the two runner-ups of 2017's semi-finals: Sofie, the dance contestant representing Luxembourg, and the Romanian waltz contestant who came second in the semi-final. Check out the full Eurovision 2018 panorama below.

Grain-size and processing effects on sorption and transport of phenanthrene in soils. Sorption of phenanthrene to six soils from semi-arid, temperate, and tropical regions was measured using isothermal batch equilibrium techniques. After equilibration, phenanthrene was desorbed with (14)C-acetone and bound radioactivity was measured with scintillation counting. The (14)C-acetone sorption coefficient (Kd) for each soil was used to calculate the partition coefficient (Koc) and the Henry's law corrected equilibrium partition coefficient (Kce), which represents the sorption potential for steady-state diffusion. All soil types exhibited Kd and Kce values that were about an order of magnitude higher than the (14)C-acetone sorption coefficient for water. This indicated that sorption and transport of phenanthrene were controlled by surface reactions. The Langmuir sorption model best described the sorption isotherms, with the best fit achieved with a single desorption constant. A multiple-site binding model fitted the equilibrium data best, with site-specific Koc values of 23.1-63.4Lkg(-1) and site-specific Kce values of 0.082-0.29. The other soils showed much greater variation in both
