Product line architecture The design of AutoCAD involves many parts, including the hardware, software, and support. Part of the software and support, is the workflow. The workflow consists of the set of rules that are used to generate the drawings, edit them and work on them. Workflows can be customized to suit the project requirements. Each user can have their own personal work area, which can be used for on-screen drawing. However, the default behavior of AutoCAD is that all drawings are stored in the Project workspace. A project workspace is used for storing drawings that belong to the project. A project can be a feature (or a drawing) or an entire assembly that is to be used for a project. There is a customizable user interface which allows users to quickly perform tasks without necessarily using the standard keyboard shortcuts. To extend the functionality of the interface, additional user interface extensions (UIEs) are available.
