your comment that the [legal approach of assigning blame to one individual] is overly simplistic because of the possibility of multiple causes. I disagree - while the legal definition is simple, the reality of cause and effect may be more complex, and assigning blame is simply a first step toward understanding what occurred. I for one believe that Aaron Swartz did not do this to himself. His contribution to the internet, the internet at large, was the critical link between the small and large communities of programmers and the common user. We owe him a great debt, and his appreciation in this issue is sorely missed. However, I feel that to deny Aaron's intent to share the facts of a legal issue
