The results of treatment of 387 patients, suffering from fractures of the upper end of the humerus were analyzed. The treatment was performed by using the method of two stages: the internal fracture fixation, closed reposition with the dynamic stabilizing (fixing) apparatus and the reconstruction with a dynamic brace. Because of the necessity to help to maintain the original

relates to a valve
apparatus used in a
control valve which controls the flow
rate of a fluid. U.S.
Pat. Nos. 4,644,853
and 5,038,583

---

disclose a conventional control valve which has in general a valve element and a valve actuator for positioning the valve element, which are housed in a valve casing, and a

---

sealing member
which is installed
around the
periphery of the
valve casing and
which is brought into contact with the
valve element to prevent the fluid
from leaking

through the gap between the valve element and the sealing member. According to the configuration as shown in U.S. Pat. No. 5,038,583, the sealing member has a hollow form which receives a fluid to be controlled, with the fluid contained therein, and the sealing member is disposed with its peripheral portion within the valve casing. The sealing member is resiliently

---

deformed against the valve element to
always urge the
valve element
toward the closed
position thereof. In the conventional control valve, when
a peripheral portion
of the sealing

member is extruded toward the valve casing to retain the sealing member in position, the sealing member is pressed by the valve casing to deform the sealing member. The sealing member is formed of an elastic material such as rubber, and the sealing member is deformed due to frictional resistance on the edge surface of the sealing member on which the fluid pressure acts to urge the valve element toward the closed position thereof. The conventional control valve thus suffers from a shortcoming in that the sealing member is apt to be deformed or worn as a result of

---

---

repetitions of the
sealing action, with the result that the
fluid is apt to leak
through the gap
between the valve
