Pixel Gladiator is a 3D action video game with a strong storyline. You join Pixel, an androgynous computer-graphic war machine. Soon after the death of Earth's ruler, the Kingdom was overrun by a deadly horde of rampaging hordes. Are you ready to help recover the throne?

Graphics. The graphics are pretty good for what is essentially a Hollywood-type film. The character models and animations are good. The textures are nothing special but they look pretty decent. The environment graphics are pretty good although you have to be quick to get the items you need. You also get the ability to customize your character with different appearances, weapons, and colors.

Sound. The sound is nothing to shout about. The soundtrack is ok and most of it is instrumentals. You have the ability to listen to several different songs for each stage so you can develop a few favorites. The lack of a voiceover really hurts the story telling, though. It can be really annoying when there is a big boss battle and you are talking to yourself. Controls. There are various options for the controls. You can use the left or right mouse buttons for dodging and shooting. The keyboard gives you the ability to switch weapons and you can aim with the mouse and change the camera. You can also toggle between first-person and third-person mode. Gameplay. You play as Pixel the cyborg war machine in this game. You have to clean up the kingdom and kill all the other AI war machines. There are a lot of different enemies, each with their own AI. You have to get the levels with different enemies that are harder than

Q: Python version of R's `as.character()` Using R version 3.3.0 I can convert a character string to a vector of character vectors using `as.character()`: Example:
`as.character(c("foo", "bar"))` # [1] "foo" "bar" Does Python version of `as.character()` exist? I know I can use `character` to make this conversion, but I am wondering whether there is some better solution.

A: You can use `str.encode('ascii', 'backslashreplace')` to get the string back to ascii: `>>> 'bar'.encode('ascii', 'backslashreplace')` 'bar' and then decode it using 'backslashreplace' instead: `>>> 'bar'.decode('backslashreplace')` 'bar' Using string slice we can slice the string to return the first or second and first character, but we need to apply `strip()` as the backslash is a special character in the encoding: `>>> s = 'bar' >>> 'bar'.encode('ascii', 'backslashreplace').decode('backslashreplace').encode('ascii').decode('ascii')[:1]` 'b' `>>> 'bar'.encode('ascii', 'backslashreplace').decode('backslashreplace').encode('ascii').decode('ascii')[:2]` 'b' Q: Portuguese localization in iPhone SDK I localized my app in German and it is working fine in Germany (iPhone 4). Now, the German people are very skilled with phones and iPhone and they find it very difficult to type in "ö" into the mobile keyboard. I know that we can d41b202975

Just like the title says: The Zombie apocalypse is here. The zombie virus has reached its peak and the world is falling apart. Make sure your rations are safe. Buy new weapons and weapons upgrades. Defend yourself in this survival horror. I added also an option to look at the items you have, with the name, what it is and how many you have. The difficulty level of the enemy is visible, so that you know how difficult your next battle is going to be. You can also see your allies' health, and their level aswell. With level 1 and level 2 it should be a little bit easier, but there will always be enemies. Enjoy! -Adamanta

View Game Added in the Game: Sprint Weapon The enemy will be harder, the weapons will be harder to aim. You have to get them to shoot in the right direction. The effect has been made much more visible. Enemies have not been added yet, but I guess they're coming soon! Fixed: Fixed being able to die when you throw a weapon at the enemy. Fixed not having all the melee weapons on the screen at the same time. Fixed a bug where you couldn't buy items from shops anymore. The
