The first new anime game in this series is very well done, but it also brings a few serious issues I need to get out of the way first: · As a BIG anime game, it's obviously going to have tons of fanservice (enjoyable ones, at that), or else we won't be seeing you reading this review. I totally understand why it was made, but from where I'm sitting, it's overkill. Still, if you're fine with it, there's absolutely no issue. · Speaking of 'enjoyable', you can actually fall in love with some of the characters in this game (not the male ones, of course). I don't know how much of a big deal that is, but personally, I like that. So, enjoy your newfound love for girls that you've probably never even talked to before. · The story is good, but I felt like they ruined it a bit with the characters. I just couldn't really feel for any of them. All you have to do to really sympathize with them is just watch some anime, and your biggest problem is over. However, if you really like the characters, it'll be a bit more difficult. · The combat system isn't bad. It's fun, it's different, and you've got options galore. However, I feel like some combos that seem like they should be simple, just aren't... the enemies and the game have such a weird sense of timing. You have to be really careful not to over-commit, which sucks. But as far as the attacks themselves, I felt like they were just about what you'd expect from them. · It's a good thing the world was clearly mapped out (they even used the same quest that Featherine did, if I'm not mistaken). If it was just laid out as a 'grab some stuff, go to here', I'd be less satisfied. · I think this is the 'cinematic' moments that FE:AR and FE:LBR are known for: the sound track really sets the mood in a good way, and it was really well done. Overall, the story in this game is pretty great. As I said earlier, as much as I dislike the fanservice, it was a joy watching the events unfold. Featherine's story was like a very different one than that of her previous games, and it was cool to see. I'd recommend this game to new players, anime bff6bb2d33

You played the NES version of the Legend of Zelda. You remember the first Time Warp Link could transform into that scrawny gold dude, and dress himself at your will. You didn't used to have to spend $4.99 per month to have access to all that gear, though.

The creator of the mobile game Raid Lords: Star Savior has created a set of icons to help players customize their weapons and armor. The character creation tool has a long list of options, but the feature set is what I'm really excited about: the extra-large screen, the wealth of graphics, the wonderful sound effects - all part of one of the most complete mobile JRPGs on the market.

Raid Lords' creator HIROSHITA:

"We waited for a long time, for so many years, to create this kind of game for mobile phones. Unfortunately, mobile phone development has become so complicated that it's not easy for us to create simple, beautiful gaming applications. ... We've always strove to create simple

, is on its way to closing. The question is, how are you going to meet that need? Organising an app store is one way. Until then, apps will simply continue to be less accessible. Independent app stores are being attacked right now by the big boys, and while many of us fully support alternative communities pushing the 'indie' label, will they be enough to support and grow the health of the indie app experience, particularly in mobile? The only team that can bring a proper indie app store that is backed by major publishers, developers and network with brand support and support that understands us is the Epic Games Store. In the same way, will Xbox assist us in future years and be a major source of revenue? If we can get the stuff going and get it on the store, will they have our back and support our app? If we don't get that marketing planned in we could become a target. Do we invest more time into marketing, or do we invest our efforts into creating 'good' apps, games and services? As I said, the Epic Games Store is the only one that has the power to back us if we're successful, so if we can get the ball rolling there's a chance we could attract some serious publishers. If we put our efforts into improving our apps, services, games and platforms then hopefully that will show through, otherwise they'd all be sourcing from the
