Å The Crew 2 skidrow torrent crack pc u.Q: Rails: Cascade Deletion I'm trying to create a relationship between users and projects. The idea is that a user can delete a project and every user of that project will be deleted as well (cascade delete). User model has_many :tags has_many :projects Project model has_many :users tags model belongs_to :user tags table id tag user_id I've set up the HABTM relations in the user and project models. I'm using REST, which is why I'm making PUT calls to /projects/1/users/1. The code below works just fine when updating a user, but I'm unclear how to get the delete_project function working. def delete_project(project) user = User.find(project.user_id) puts "delete_project called" user.destroy puts "user destroyed" puts "user destroyed" puts "retrieving project" puts project.users.collect {|x| x.user_id} end def delete_user(project_id, user) project = Project.find(project_id) puts "delete_user called" puts "delete_user called" puts "delete_user called" project.destroy puts "project destroyed" puts "project destroyed" puts "project destroyed" puts "project destroyed" puts project.users.collect {|x| x.user_id} end A: Basically, your question is: how do I destroy a user and all of its projects in one API call? And your answer is: you can't. Remember, you've got User and Project models. An API resource is just information about the DB data. You cannot "destroy" an API resource that you created by making the "destroy" call on the database. You can, of course, call the destroy method on User and Project which will

The free PC version is full of in-depth game modes for players to dive into, as well as really.This invention pertains to the art of automatic picture framing, and more particularly to an apparatus and method for loading picture slugs into a blank setting plate used in the framing of a picture frame. The invention is particularly applicable to the automatic setting of picture frame blanks in which the picture slug is automatically slit and inserted into the blank setting plate. The blank setting plate when inserted into a frame blank is inserted into a frame and automatically positioned in a frame turning machine. The frame blank is then rotated in the turning machine to set the outer perimeter frame of the frame blank in place, after which the frame blank is in turn rotated in the frame turning machine to set the inner frame of the frame blank in place. The blank setting plate receives the picture slug or picture strip which is slit to the proper width for insertion into the blank setting plate. The invention is particularly applicable to the automatic picture framing apparatus and method described in coassigned U.S. Pat. No. 3,967,404 granted to George Hunt et al. on Jul. 6, 1976, and more particularly to a blank setting plate which is used to provide accurate positioning of the blank setting plate in a frame blank turning machine. The blank setting plate is slidable horizontally in relation to the carriage which supports and moves the blank setting plate to its receiving position in a frame blank turning machine. The blank setting plate has a relatively flexible, resilient outer frame which rides on an oppositely biased shaft. As the blank setting plate enters the frame blank turning machine, the blank setting plate is moved downwardly in the frame turning machine so that the blank setting plate is released for insertion of a picture slug or picture strip into the blank setting plate and the outer frame of the blank setting plate is forced against the oppositely biased shaft. The blank setting plate also has a relatively rigid inner frame, which is slidable in the frame blank turning machine. To release the inner frame, the inner frame has a stationary projecting rib which rides on the oppositely biased shaft as the blank setting plate enters the frame blank turning machine. A biasing means is provided for resiliently urging the inner frame toward the oppositely biased shaft. In coassigned U.S. Pat. No. 4
