To evaluate the effect of platelet-rich fibrin (PRF) application in the management of alveolar osteitis following tooth extraction. A randomized controlled clinical trial. The subjects consisted of 50 patients (25 in the PRF group and 25 in the conventional treatment group). The patients were followed up on days 3, 7, 14 and 21 and examined for pain and swelling. The duration of symptomatic treatment was recorded. Pain and swelling were markedly reduced in the PRF group within 14 days. There was no significant difference between the two groups in regards to the duration of symptomatic treatment. The post-operative pain and swelling in the PRF group were significantly reduced when compared to the conventional treatment group. PRF application after extraction appeared to be more effective for the management of alveolar osteitis.3:44: Right, the lack of formalised training is a big part of the problem, right? 3:47: Right. 3:48: Some people have been able to find their own way, but I think there's often a lot of trial and error, and maybe you need to be exposed to that trial and error process first, and maybe that's something that the education system doesn't do quite as well as it could. 3:52: Maybe the primary school system could be better at that. But, yeah, because we do usually work with somebody who's been an unsupervised audience with a professional bodybuilder
