What's new in A Light In The Dark:

are the valley farmers, the ones sitting along the river when you cross it. If you cross it safely you may say your peace. They are the farmers of the deep orange rock for which the valley is known. If you make mistakes they are the ones who smile and shake their heads and call you _sutes_ in a friendly tone. This is not your fault, nor theirs. They will tell you that in summer long ago, a wolf called _tinii_ came. They say it was looking for game. They won't tell you what happened, though. They say that it was taken by the farmers, run back the mountains and the animal was returned to the sky. Well, this is how it works. They say that they can live without the game, but yes, they do rely heavily on the game here in the mountains. One day, though, the game will be gone. There will be no more sunsets to gaze upon or mushrooms to grow. The fields will be as barren as when the first kind was born. Some of these people will have chosen a profession specific to the valley. Other people will have no profession. This is how it is. This is the land, this is the valley. This is the Luminyte. Jake's Joke: If you hang upside-down on a tree, do you twist and turn all day? Please respond. You are now my new best friend. About Jake Slocum Jake Slocum is an artist currently living in Adelaide. He has been working in a variety of media since the 1980s. He has taught art, starting in 1986, and he has exhibited and received numerous awards since then. He has been a columnist for the Adelaide News since 1986. More Abstract This is a mechanism to create a hash table, a mapping from objects to objects. The code is written in C. It works on `std::string` objects in any combination of associative type (`std::map` or `std::unordered_map`) and user-defined numeric type (`int`, `double`, `float`). The numeric type used is the type used in most C libraries, except that `int` and `long` are often overloaded, and are not used as a hash. It does not support NNNQL, BLOBs, or
