dubbed hq freeÂ· Asymmetrical quantitative voice analysis in unilateral vocal fold paralysis (VFP). To determine whether quantitative voice analysis may predict outcome in the management of patients with unilateral vocal fold paralysis (UVFP). Prospective study in an academic tertiary referral center of 100 consecutive patients who were referred for laryngeal stroboscopy. All patients underwent an independent voice and speech evaluation by 2 experienced speech-language pathologists.

The severity of vocal cord paralysis was classified according to the ipsilateral amplitude ratios of the left and right vocal folds, as observed during phonation. All patients underwent preoperative and postoperative quantitative voice analysis. All patients were studied during sustained phonation of a sustained /a/. The average relative amplitude of the right vocal fold was 1.07 and that of the left vocal fold was 0.9, indicating predominantly superior right vocal fold paralysis. In patients with predominantly right vocal fold paralysis, the closure of the right vocal fold correlated with the average pitch of the sustained /a/(Spearman's rho = -0.43, P = .006) and with the relative amplitude of the right vocal fold (Spearman's rho = -0.45, P = .004). The relative amplitude of the right vocal fold is a better predictor of patient outcome in the management of UVFP than is the relative amplitude of
