Africa's biggest union, the South African Congress of Trade Unions (SACTU) has rallied its members to help people who are infected with COVID-19, the disease caused by the new coronavirus. A statement signed by SACTU national chairperson Sello Hatang says the union has taken precautionary measures to ensure that its members do not fall ill or spread the coronavirus, while calling on its members to respect a city's lockdown, and that any breach of the restrictions will be severely punished. "The health of SACTU members is our priority right now. We must consider them as members of our family and as an extension of our own. SACTU has given instructions to its sub-sector structures and trade unions in each province, to take all possible precautions to prevent SACTU members from being exposed to the virus and spreading it," the statement said. SACTU has asked its members to take advantage of its newly-opened data base, www.labourdirect.co.za, and check if they are exposed to the virus, which it says is not fatal in most cases. The union is also urging its members to stay informed and not to panic during the coronavirus pandemic. "SACTU supports the World Health Organisation's (WHO) guidelines for the general public and their efforts to contain the spread of the disease. We feel the need to state that the virus does not only affect people of black African origin. We, SACTU members, are not immune to this virus and have to be equally cautious," the statement further read. SACTU has said in the statement that it will take necessary disciplinary action against any member who breaches the lockdown. "Anyone who is found to be endangering the health of our members
