This photo, of course, is the output of the actual C6 battery capacity. The reason for the difference is the lack of the SOH (Start Of Head) in the battery. The capacitance discharge from the battery will, of course, depend on the number of pack lines connected to the terminal. This can be a big problem. As you can see, we have large, medium, and small packs. If you use only small packs with the battery directly connected to the cell, you will see a 3.2V.
