finally, open your usb stick and use the provided batch file. the makefile and the batch file are also available for download. in general, the idea of the batch file is to compile the kernel and then copy the image to the root directory of the usb stick (i.e., the place where the kernel will be stored). so, if the kernel was compiled successfully, we can now copy it to the root directory of the stick. go to that directory and copy the kernel using the copy command. check your kernel to make sure that you've copied the kernel. now, we are ready to use our device. however, we still need to write a startup script that will load the usb driver and run the kernel. for this, we are going to use an external file called startup.bat, which is provided with the files for download. if you want to use your own startup script, you can use it in the folder %_winceroot%platformcepcsrcbootloader. for example, if the device name is %_winceroot%platformcepcsrcbootloaderarm, then the file startup.bat will be located in the folder %_winceroot%platformcepcsrcbootloaderarm. go to that folder and open the startup.bat file using any text editor. wince os is a professional operating system for handheld devices, currently available for personal digital assistants (pdas) and mobile phones. this operating system is meant for devices that do not have a full windows operating system. wince os has the same functionality as windows xp embedded, windows vista embedded, windows 7 embedded, windows 8 embedded and windows embedded 8.1. with a wince device and a windows 98, 2000, me, xp, vista, 7, or windows 8 device, the two operating systems can work together to provide a full windows experience for both devices. windows 98, 2000, me, xp, vista, 7, or windows 8 can run as windows ce 6.0 os, and windows ce 6.0 can run as a windows 98, 2000, me, xp, vista, 7, or windows 8 os.

well i received my software from my company and in the welcome-email it told me about some consignment software. it confirmed the delivery address and also i get to select 2 or three files to send with the device. on my side i receive 1 file, and the software. within the software, after opening up in the palm pc, they say about mistakes and a "can't find minios" or something similar, and also i received a impossible to install desktop icon. i replied to their help desk and they said they'll take the software off line and send me a replacement, but until now, no email. the numbers were to the same telephone number and perhaps it has been disconnected, so i haven't tried anymore. i haven't any cash to return, and to my dismay, the number won't go through to verizon. i get the same messages. i agree you have pretty much covered this topic but i think it should be made easier to do this. i have a 5x10x30 scope that has a cheap radio receiver and the batteries in the front and back are good, i have done this before with good success, i just don't know how it has changed. i can't find the manual for the device but i do have a picture of the radio part. i have googled it and i have found a repair shop online that says he will do this for $140 per scope, i don't have the cash and it is expensive to ship back anyway. do you have another suggested solution? just so i understand there is a database that will create a.rtf file for users to read? is there a way to allow them to view/print that.rtf file in a.pdf format? or should i just create a.rtf file by hand and send that to the customer? 5ec8ef588b
