Concrete is one of the most widely used construction materials for infrastructure, but concrete has the disadvantage of being easy to crack. One of the factors that influence concrete cracks is rain water, because water can enter and seep into the pores. Several studies have been carried out to overcome the cracking of concrete structures; one of them is the addition of bacteria that have calcium carbonate precipitating activity. Calcium carbonate from bacterial metabolism can closed on cracked concrete surfaces. This method is commonly called Microbial Induced Calcite Precipitation (MICP). The source of bacteria in this study is bacteria at Wawalosea hot springs from the limestone mountain. The research is healing of cracks in concrete compare by bacteria MICP and MICP immobilization using alginate-chitin. The results showed that the concrete made with the addition of MICP isolates as much as 1.6×10^8 cells / mL had a greater compressive strength than the concrete without the addition of isolates. The value of compressive strength and absorbency of concrete water with the addition of MICP isolates has a compressive strength of 25.78 Mpa and addition imobilization MICP has 18 Mpa. So when compared to concrete without the addition of isolates and concrete with the addition of MICP isolates, the value of concrete compressive strength occurred at 100%. Warppls Linear PLS - The aim of this linear analysis is to establish the linear trends of each crack type as well as to find the possible influencing factors such as different truck types, which can be used to develop intelligent traffic control systems. According to the results, the model is adequately validated with an.
