mount & blade with fire & sword features a new faction system. the player can choose a faction at the beginning of the game. as the player progresses through the game and builds up his army, he will be granted access to more troops and more powerful troops in the upcoming battles. the player has to choose between the three factions. each faction has unique troop trees with different powers and different troop formations. the player can choose between the three factions at the beginning of the game. mount & blade with fire & sword features a different system for character progression. the player starts the game with only two primary and one secondary skills. the player has to earn the skill points needed to increase the number of skills in his skill tree by completing quests, defeating enemy troops, and winning battles. the player starts with 30 skill points at the beginning of the game and can earn additional skill points by completing quests. in with fire & sword there are two main factions - the muscovite and cossack factions. the muscovite faction is represented by the players' character and the cossack faction is represented by the npc soldiers. the player must start out with the cossack faction and, later in the game, switch to the muscovite faction. from the military point of view, the game is mostly about sniping, as the game lets you take out opponents from a distance with the rifleman skill, and the best option in those circumstances is to shoot from afar, at close range, or use grenades to hit groups of people at once. you can also use the musket and pistols for the first few levels, but it is really only good for shooting from a distance and holding back on the musket/pistol until you have a good close range weapon, like the pike or the sword. even with these weapons, it is recommended to equip them as soon as you get them, as reload times can be long, and it can take a while to get a good aim, so you want to get as much of a distance as you can.
