
Siemens Nx 9 Torrent [WORK]

this week, i am being asked to represent a future customer in a case against siemens industry software inc. in which the company would like to convert him to a loyal customer. of course, he did not download the software, and he certainly did not use it for malicious purposes. in fact, he never even saw the siemens nx 9 software. but that is not the issue. the issue is whether or not a future customer can be forced to pay siemens industry software inc. a settlement based on a software that he or she never even saw in order to force him or her to be a customer. the current class action lawsuits brought against people who have illegally downloaded the siemens industry software inc. software are beginning to die off. the first one, which was brought in august of 2011 by chris derose, is now winding down. in that case, the plaintiff settled for $1,000 and his own attorney fees. the second class action was brought by the company in march of 2012. this second class action lawsuit was brought by the defendant in the lawsuit, robert w. patterson, and was filed in the eastern district of pennsylvania. the case was transferred to the district of new jersey, which i have always found to be a good thing in that it allows me to have a look at the facts involved in these lawsuits without having to file a lawsuit in my home state of pennsylvania. this is why siemens industry software inc. sued numerous individuals for the illegal use of their software. the software company always starts out with the most basic user, the cracker. it is their goal to persuade this person to purchase a license for the software, or to convince the cracker to not pirate the software anymore. then, after the cracker purchase or loses interest, the software companies next turn to business users. many of these people know better, but they get tired of fighting with the cracker and just buy a license for the software to use at their office. as the cracker is either gone or tired of the software, siemens industry software inc. then moves on to anyone who is a hobbyist or even a casual user. these people are simply curious, and the software companies know that their chances of convincing them to buy a license for the software are lessened. but, the software companies still try to sue them because they are hoping that one of the hobbyist or casual users will install the software on a home computer and then the software companies will be able to track the ip address of that person.
